CHAT'S PERIL.

A Story of Panther Hollow.

Written for the Press by Robert C. Haynes, Author of "Fent's Christmas," Etc.

CHAPTER IX. JOHN AND ANNIE.

When Johnny Dee had finished up his story of their ride through Panther Hollow, Annie said, "Still sitting by his side."

"If I had been in Laura's place, it would have been a different story. I'd put a veto on them both."

"I can't see why you'd blame the boys, or why you'd veto me. For all is fair in love, you know."

"But be that as it may," he said, "let us not talk of that. Let's talk of snakes, or politics—Are you a Democrat?"

"Shouldn't think I was," Annie returned. "I'll never have a man like a Republican."

"Indeed, you're quite discouraging. Suppose I will have to shove—And die, too, a broken heart—A victim of my love."

"There's one thing certain," John went on, "I'll always be a man. And sick or ailing, I'll live and die a good Republican."

"Yet I'm not prejudiced at all—Was never in my life. And I would not object to have a Democratic wife!"

Ere Annie could reply to this, Chat rode up on his mule. Entered the parlor unannounced—He does this, as a rule.

"Hello, big Sis—taking a rest? I took a mule ride to town—And you're still here, I see?"

"Yes, I'm still here, and doing well. Johnny returned, "although I was preparing soon to make some overtures to go."

"You can't go yet, John," Chat replied. "Must stay and have some dinner. For we're to have a regular feast—Expecting Corry Minner."

"Did you bring me a letter, Chat? Or, as to that, indeed, A paper or a magazine—Just anything to read?"

"Was nothing for you, Sis," he said. "Just one for only me. And it is new, let me say—Postmarked at Mound, you see."

"You don't know that chirography—I'll bet my mule on that. Don't you wish you could do that way?"

"You can't, the 'Sis' said Chat. Annie could not reply to this. For in came Corry Minner. The mid-day meal was then announced. And all went in to dinner.

They went in to the dining room. And when they'd all sat down, Chat told them of the happenings that morning in the town.

CHAPTER X. CHAT IN TOWN.

'Twas soon this morning, as you know—Long ere the hour for dinner—I caught my mule and rode to town, To meet with Corry Minner.

For Corry had addressed to me A little note, which said For me to meet him on that day. Part of the letter read:

"Old Boy: You'd better come to town, Or you'll be very sorry; Something takes place on Wednesday next—Can't be postponed. Yours, Corry."

And so I went, as I've just said, And there I chanced to meet—With his accustomed cheerfulness—Judge Hearin on the street.

"How are you, Chat?" the Judge spoke up. "You'd better call around: A letter came for you last night. Postmarked, I think, at Mound."

I thanked the Judge, and then went on Round to the office door, Where every body goes for mail Twice every day, or more.

"Hello Chat—when did you get in? Come right on," said Tom; "A letter here for you, my boy—I can't say whom it's from."

Tom handed me the envelope. I looked at and found Judge Hearin's words were true enough. 'Twas postmarked at Mound.
